

HARRIET ELWES - THE FOODWORKS COOKERY SCHOOL

Harriet Elwes is living her dream; she has just launched The Foodworks Cookery School on the Colesbourne Estate in the heart of the Cotswolds offering a wide range of courses designed to inspire everyone from budding chefs to experienced cooks.

“There was a definite gap in the market for a cookery school in the Cotswolds,” says Harriet, who has spent the last two years designing the state-of-the-art school, recruiting six of the region’s best chefs.

Harriet’s father-in-law Sir Henry Elwes (the Lord-Lieutenant for Gloucestershire) helped her with the contemporary venue for her kitchens on the Colesbourne Estate. Using her design skills, Harriet sketched her vision for the school and now she has the business she always dreamt about. Creating a friendly and welcoming venue, Harriet hopes to inspire a variety of cooks from young children to experienced cooks. Many of her courses are already sold out and the rest are filling up quickly. “I always wanted the school to appeal to all types of cooks and the courses are tailored for beginners to professional cooks.”
